What drove fund performance during the past 12 months?

- U.S. equity markets navigated a twelve-month period shaped by competing forces: optimism surrounding monetary easing and enthusiasm for AI-related investment on one hand, and escalating trade policy uncertainty and the outbreak—and subsequent de-escalation—of military conflict with Iran on the other.
- Small cap growth stocks delivered a 39% return over the period, significantly outperforming large cap growth stocks, which returned 18%.
- The investment strategy's emphasis on durability was evident during the period, as the strategy outperformed on 12 of the 15 days on which the index declined 2% or more.
- Our investment process seeks to focus on high quality companies with recurring revenue and what we believe to be sustainable competitive advantages, which during the period we continued to find lower on the capitalization spectrum.
- The period saw pronounced relative outperformance by lower-quality stocks—the highest-beta quintile of the index outperformed the lowest by more than 60 percentage points, and companies with no earnings, and in many cases no revenue, meaningfully outpaced the broader index—which ran counter to the Fund's quality bias and created a significant headwind to relative results.
- From a sector perspective, stock selection was positive in the health care, financials, materials, and energy sectors.
- Conversely, negative stock selection in the information technology, industrials, and consumer discretionary sectors detracted from relative returns.
